

Amy Karlson

6th Grade

Have you ever noticed how animals benefit us in life? Well, from America to Kiribati, all animals benefit us. We need these animals for various reasons. From farm animals to household pets, we should all know by now how much we need animals.

Take the guide dog, for example. They help the blind. They guide them. Without them, how will the blind live safely? How will they cross the street or travel to a certain destination or location without possibly severely injuring themselves? This is one of the many reasons why we need animals. Imagine a friend or relative of yours. What if they were blind? Let's say that they're running errands and that he or she currently has no guide dog. Chances are that they will get severely injured. They might even die. This is why guide dogs benefit the blind and are useful.

Other animals that benefit us are animals such as cows, pigs, horses, sheep, etc. for products. For example, cows, as we all know, give us milk. Without milk, how will our bones get stronger? Sheep give us wool. Without it, we might not have the warm blankets and clothes that we have today. Horses make all kinds of glue. If there is no glue, what else can we use (besides tape, of course) to keep things stuck together? So, this is another reason why animals benefit us every day. Animals literally keep us healthy.

One of the most important reasons why we need animals is that they keep us company. Without them, we might not live the same way. If you're all alone, you can spend time with your pet. If you're usually alone, then why not buy a pet? They keep you company! They also teach you life lessons; including responsibility. Every day, you have to feed, clean, and play with your pet. If you don't do any of these, or any of the sorts, your pet might die due to starvation, depression, having an unsanitary environment, etc. And without a pet, you will get a little depressed, as well. Buying another pet will cost a lot of money and it won't be the same pet like the one you had before. Who knows what your new pet will be like? They might be annoying, hyper-active, strange, lazy, aggressive, any of the sorts. But there could be a possibility that it would be well-behaved and trained. Either way, the pet that you buy is lucky to have a home. If no one bought it, they might die alone. They never would have had a companion and they never would have known about you.

Remember to be grateful and thankful for animals. They benefit us every day. It doesn't matter exactly where you are. Animals will always be useful. Whether they give you food, companionship, etc. They'll always be useful to us. Even in over 9,000 years! Animals will benefit us every day.