

Kawther Osman

3rd Grade

Have you ever wonder what an animal would say if they could talk? Well, I did and I figured that they would have lots and lots to say and whine about. They would express their feelings to me, ask me tons of questions, and maybe even have a normal conversation with me. Sometimes I really wish that my Chihuahua could talk and tell me what she wants instead of barking and giving me an awful headache.

To start with, if animals could talk they would definitely have negative and positive things to say. For example, my Chihuahua would say, "Why do you always carry me around, I'm sick of it...I'm not a baby you know!" And my cat would say, "Why do you always give me baths when you know I'm scared of water!" They may hate a lot of the stuff I do to them like bathing them and carrying them around but they sure don't express it sometimes. For example, my best friend had a cocktail bird and her sister would always pull on her rainbow colored feathers, so she expressed her feelings by escaping out of her cage when it was open and flying away from home.

Secondly, if animals could talk they would express their feelings to me by showing how much they adore me. Regular cats meow and purr to show me their love and devotion but if they could talk they would actually tell how they feel about me. If I get on their nerves for some reason they would angrily blurt out "STOP...what's your problem with me!" They would also express their feelings by telling me what they like and what they don't like. If they do something wrong, I'd just yell, STOP, NOW SIT!" And they would obey my orders. But if they could talk I would tell them why what they did was wrong.

Finally, animals have minds which mean that they actually understand or at least can sense what's happening to them. If my Chihuahua could talk they would definitely ask me tons and tons of unstoppable questions like "Why don't I eat the same food you do" or "Why do you always give me walks?" If animals could talk they might also tell me stories which would be so funny. My Chihuahua is also very loyal and if he could talk, he would have a normal conversation with me on how children should listen to their parents and respect them. He'd say, "You should listen and obey your parents because they only care about you." Another conversation I would have with my dog would be "treat others how you want to be treated."

To sum it up, if animals could talk they would absolutely be able to express their feelings, have regular conversations, ask me a lot of questions and much more. It would be really easy to communicate with animals using words instead of animals using their own language. If animals could talk life would be way easier.