

De'Aundre Davis
Ms. Brownlee

Homeless pets and survival

Being homeless isn't easy for anyone especially pets. Being a homeless pet is hard and dangerous to survive than being a homeless person. Homeless pets need things to survive in this world, and going from a sheltered pet to a homeless pet means that certain changes have to be made in order to survive.

One way a homeless pet has to survive is making shelter, because they no longer have a safe place to sleep. Without a safe place to sleep they wouldn't be protected from all the bad weather that happens, they could get cold at night, rained on, snowed on, or during the summer they would be very hot. Homeless animals have to not only find food but healthy food to eat, because without having a home homeless pets don't know if the food they find is healthy or not, which makes surviving hard to do if you eat unhealthy food that can make them sick. Animals that have homes have homes and owners give them healthy good food and they don't have to worry about finding their own food.

Surviving means staying healthy. A pet that has an owner takes them to the vet if they get sick, but if you're a homeless pet you have to try not to get sick because you don't have anyone to take you to the doctor, and if you get sick you could die from disease. Homeless pets need safety from the outside world. They need safety so people wouldn't be mistreating them and they also wouldn't have to worry about the dog catcher putting them in the pound and having to be adopted by a family. Animals that have homes don't have to worry about the outside their safety is always their and they know who their masters are.

Lastly homeless pets need love to survive. Without having love they would feel like no one wants them, they wouldn't feel comfortable, and they wouldn't trust anyone who might be a good person and wants to give them help, they would be afraid of everyone they meet. Pets that have loving homes live longer because love is power, and everyone including pets homeless or not need love to survive.