Randol Mill Road Construction Begins November 12

Beginning Monday, November 12, various construction related activities will begin on Randol Mill Road from North Collins to Nolan Ryan Expressway.

Contractors will be reconstructing the Randol Mill Road and Baird Farm Road intersection. This project includes three phases. Construction is estimated to last approximately four months.

- Phase I: Median reconstruction along Randol Mill Road and lane closures
- Phase II: Reconstruction of the south half of the Randol Mill Road and Baird Farm Road intersection
- Phase III: Reconstruction of the north half of the Randol Mill Road and Baird Farm intersection

What's Being Done?

Phase I is anticipated to begin November 12 when construction crews begin modifying some median locations to prepare for the reconstruction of the Randol Mill Road and Baird Farm Road intersection.

Phase II is anticipated to begin in December. The westbound lanes of Randol Mill Road will be reduced to one lane each way so that the south half of the intersection can be rebuilt.

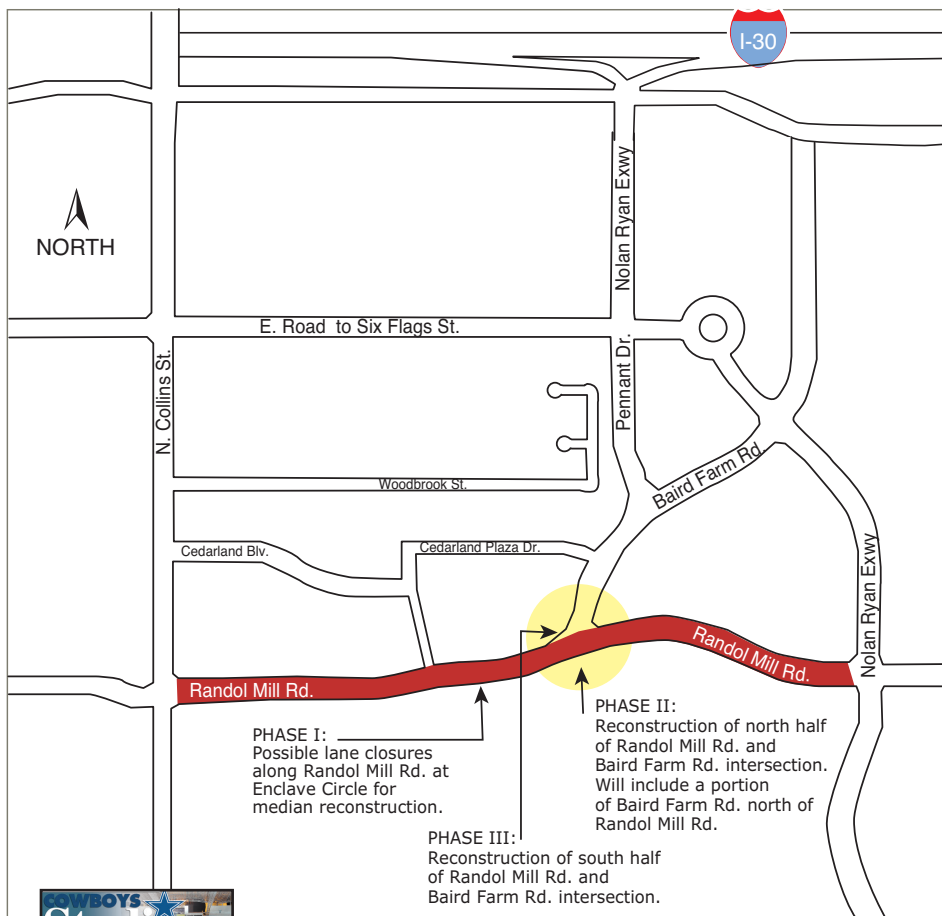

Phase III is anticipated to begin toward the end of January. The eastbound lanes of Randol Mill Road will be reduced to one lane each way so the north half of the intersection can be reconstructed.

Additionally, the northbound lanes of Baird Farm Road at Randol Mill Road will be closed. The southbound lanes of Baird Farm Road will be converted to two way traffic (one lane each way). Motorists will use Cedarland Plaza, Pennant and Copeland to access Randol Mill Road.

Looking Ahead

The City of Arlington and the Texas Department of Transportation are making preparations for more I-30 improvements to get started this month. Plan for and expect some changes on I-30 between Collins and Cooper streets. Expect lane reductions and ramp closures.

Monitor the City of Arlington and TXDOT websites for the latest I-30 construction updates at www.ArlingtonTx.gov or www.txdot.gov keyword "Three Bridges."
