Wilson County announces re-start of construction work that meets safety and worker-protection guidelines

Gov. Inslee earlier this week, said that it is not clear yet when other businesses will similarly be able to reopen. He said his office hopes to use the Phase 1 restoration of downtown Renton as a template for continuing to open other sectors of the economy if health metrics continue to trend positively.

The plan covers all variety of construction projects including state projects.

To resume work, existing projects must maintain the following safety measures:

• A comprehensive COVID-19 exposure, control and mitigation plan is in place.
• A safety plan that includes physical distancing, adequate personal protective equipment, and other risk-reduction measures is in place. Each job site must have a COVID-19 supervisor who is in charge of implementing the plan on the jobsite.
• Written notice of the work to be performed at the job site (which is subject to review and approval) must be posted for employees, subcontractors and government officials.
